The Germans apparently wanted a reconciliation—a kind of an armistice—that would give their generals and industrial leaders time to prepare for the next conflict. At that time, nearly four years ago, Germany was moving for practically the same kind of peace negotiations which she has suggested many times since and is suggested many times since and is suggesting now; Wangenheim's plan was that representatives of the warring powers should gather around a table and settle things on the principle of "give and take." He said that fibre was no sense in demanding that each side state its terms in advance.

"For both sides to state their terms in advance would ruin the whole thing," he said. "What would we do? Germany, of course, would make claims that the other side would regard as ridiculously extravagant. The entente would state terms that would put all Germany in a rage. As a result both sides would get so angry that there would be no conference. No—if we really want to end this war we must have an armistice. Once we stop fighting we shall not go at it again. History presents no instance in a great war where an armistice has not resulted in peace. It will be so in this case."
